“Anything and everything to do with trucks.”

It is a broad and ambitious claim but it does sum up the approach and passion of this relatively young Hawkes Bay transport engineering company.

Aaron Donovan formed the company in 2013 to pursue his passion for trucks. The company employs 14 engineers, welders and fabricators, building a wide range of truck bodies and ancillary equipment. Curtain-siders are a speciality, though the company is increasingly getting into logging and building a big reputation in that sector.

The company's Onekawa plant in the Hawke's Bay is fully equipped including a drive through bay for easy access.

C7 prides itself on fast turn around but also the flexibility to meet customers' specific requirements and the company's own rigidly enforced quality standards.

Quality is never compromised by and for speed.

Aaron promises they will look at “anything and everything” when it comes to transport engineering.

And with fast expanding product diversity and a growing customer base, it looks like they are delivering on the promise.
