

White Truck Dismantlers Limited

NZTTMF Member Since: March 2017

White Truck Dismantlers began life as a general carrier, started by a former builder—the father of the present owner Willy White. Willy joined the business in 1986, starting—as he says—at the bottom.

Today, the company's core business is servicing and repair, dismantling and general transport engineering.

However, in addition to general engineering and servicing, the company has started building its own range of small trailers and is now actively promoting those on the open market.

There are plenty of options available, including horse box bodies and conversions, race-car trailers, skeletals, and bathtub bodies.

The common elements to all the builds are openness to any type of build, and Willy's adherence to quality work. His 12-strong staff are highly experienced and, Willy says, can turn their collective hands to anything.

Some of those staff have been with Willy since he started, and that brings a lot of experience to every job.

While building trailers, they have also built a strong and loyal customer base.

Willy attributes that to the quality of the work, but also to, "keeping the customers happy by doing the job at a fair price and doing it right."

And it seems to have worked.

Whilst their existing workshop on Omaha Road in Hastings is fully-kitted and staffed, and has included over the years additional workshop space, new offices, and a parts department, it remains one of the busiest in the Bay and is, Willy says, often at full capacity meeting the demand the company's growing reputation has generated.

He says he and his team are on the lookout for even more capacity to cater to an ever-increasing customer base.
